2000 Port Townsend Film Festival September 22-24, 2000

On Saturday night passholders were treated to a screening of one of actor Tony Curtis's best films, Sweet Smell of Success, which was followed by an interview with the actor by Turner Classic Movies primetime host, Robert J. Osborne. Another Curtis classic, Some Like It Hot, was screened at the Taylor Street Outdoor Theatre on a Friday night.

"On behalf of Turner Classic Movies, I congratulate you on a wonderful inaugural festival. We were really impressed with the entire event—from the programming to the executive to the attendance. It was as if you had been doing it for years. We were thrilled to be involved." - Gloria Avillar, Director for Special Events, Turner Classic Movies

"The PTFF has two things going for it that could conceivably turn it into a world-class cinema event: 1) an isolated, special location that makes going there part of the fun; and 2) sponsorship by, and a special connection to, Turner Classic Movies and, thus, the nation's largest library of vintage Hollywood films." - William Arnold, Seattle Post-Intelligencer

"A huge rave for this past weekend's Port Townsend Film Festival! The films were fantastic; I saw 11, and there was not a dud in the bunch. The organization of the event was phenomenal (a last-minute thrash to fix a partly blown projector was performed with such grace and poise that the crowd gathering for the movie was completely oblivious). In the three days that I was there, I heard not one single complaint or negative comment about the festival. There was a truly rare and amazing feeling of camaraderie and harmony, enthusiasm and excitement, both from the filmgoers and from the organizing staff and volunteers. Bravo!" - Rant & Rave Alive, Seattle Times, September 29, 2000
